Two Summer Courses Just Added

Living Labor History (LBCC-4100)
This course introduces students to the major developments of working people, their organizations, and their communities over the course of American history. Special emphasis will be placed on understanding the formation of the modern labor movement as a transition from 19th century “producers” organizations to the founding of the early American Federation of Labor, the rise of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and the social, economic, and political forces shaping labor since 1945. Instructor: Paul Gibson

Reading and Writing Critically (ENGL-3001)
This course is designed to help students apply critical thinking to their reading and writing both academically and generally. By learning the basic essay structure and practicing ways to manipulate it to match the messages they need to express, students improve their writing skills and prepare for upcoming academic and business challenges. With the course’s emphasis on critical reading concepts, students learn to read between the lines of other writers’ work and see through their writing techniques, enabling them to uncover the writers’ purposes and respond more effectively. Students will also learn to critically read their own work and apply revision techniques to develop individual styles and clear messages. In addition, the course will instruct students in using sources to enhance their arguments. Instructor: Jennifer Harrison

Dates
Both are 15-week (May 6—August 16, 2013) online courses with a residential component, June 7-14, 2013.

Location
This summer residency will take place at IAMAW’s William W. Winpisinger Education and Technology Center at Placid Harbor in Hollywood, MD. It is a facility built by workers for workers. Its purpose is to meet the complete range of educational needs of IAMAW members and to provide an atmosphere where members can learn undisturbed by the daily demands of the workplace.
